J.D. Wymert House
Continuation Sheet 7.1

Description

This small farmstead was built by J.D. Wymert in 1918, reportedly to replace a dwelling further south on Tannery Road which burned during Wymert's tenure. The farm buildings are arrayed from north to south along Tannery Road, from the large foursquare house on the north to a large bankbarn on the south. The road which accesses the rear of the bankbarn, at the second level as the structure is built into a hill on the west, continues up and around a hill to access the T. Mathias house plus two contemporary residences. Evidently land accessed by that road is currently in the possession of developers.

The Wymert House is a large, brick, foursquare structure with the principal, three-bay-wide facade oriented to the east. The pyramidal roof is interrupted on the east and west elevations by large dormers with paired windows. A full width one-story porch on the east is supported on stone pylons. The structure is built into a hill on the west, thus the basement level on the east is partially above ground. A small frame addition was constructed on the north side.

A small brick garage is located southeast of the dwelling, with, in succession along the farm road, a springhouse, meathouse, chicken house, large hog pen and bankbarn. The buildings are in poor repair and the dilapidated and unkept appearance of the property is exacerbated by the debris which is strewn about the site.

Continuation Sheet 8.1

Significance

This poorly maintained farmstead was built for J.D. Wymert in 1918. Little is known about Wymert, although there is some speculation that he might have been involved in bootlegging liquor during Prohibition.
